THE INSCRIPTIONS IN FULL

Notes and Comments-Cords of Canes and Bullets Still Plentiful.

(Special From a Staff Correspondent) WEST APPOMATTOX, VA., April 11. The last veteran and the last visitor who came to hear and to see all that pertained to "North Carolina Day" on the famous Appomattox battlefield has gone, and this splendid little Virginia village has entirely recovered from the excite-ment and confusion that the unexpected large crowd here Sunday and yesterday saturaly brought about.

Attraly brought about.

The good people here had been reading in the newspapers about the discussion concerning the inscriptions on the North Carolina monument, and they had heart of the threats of some of the dissatisfied not to attend the exercises, and somehow they had gotten an idea into their heads that the unveiling was going to be a very small affair anyhow. This may explain why this good village was so poorly prepared to take care of the great crowds that did come. Half of the Sunday had not gone by before these people of Appomattox 'discovered their mistake and then they went to work to provide for the comfort of the army of visitors already here and still coming, and right well they did.

Much of the credit for the handsome manner in which the people here entertained the 'visitors, on what may be termed short notice, is due to Congressman Hal Flood. Appomattox is his home county, and he did not propose for anybody to come here and go away complaining of the quality of Appomattox hospitality. He was a genial general host, and made all the visiting Carolinians and Virginians feel at home, as if Appomattox was common property, belonging to Confederates and their descendants. It is easy enough to understand why Mr. Flood is so popular in the Tenth District. The good people here had been reading

The Inscriptions.

Speaking about those much discussed inscriptions: They have been published several times, but now that the unveiling was attended with such happy fraternity, and such general good fesing, it may be well enough to reproduce them that the reader may see in the light of the speeches and explanations made yesterday, how harmless they really are. really are.

The inscriptions on the monument are

It is probable that not less than two cords of canes were cut from the battle-field by visitors from a distance.

It is estimated that the back and wagon fares left in the neighborhood by the visitors will come near aggregating $2,000.

the visitors will come near aggregating $2,000.

Mr. Burke, of Burke's Hotel an old-time railroad man and talegraph operator, is one of the wost accommodating men in the world. After his splendid little hotel had been filled to overflowing he put himself to much trouble to find some other place for the people to find rest. Some other hotel folks don't bother themselves to hunt after they get their own shanty filled.

Mr. H. E. Long, of the Richmond Western Union office, came up to handle the "rush" of press matter, and well he handled it. The newspaper men fell inlove with him.

It may be well to remark that the supply of bullets "found on the battlefield" and for sale near the site of the old McLean house, has not been exhausted and never will be usual the lead mines

BOWLING GREEN, VA., April 11.—
The Republican party managers are sending out letters to the government officers here asking for five per cent. of the salary to pay campaign expenses. A postmaster in this country, who received a letter asking for this countribution put the letter in his pocket and when a crowd had sasembled at his store healted them together and told them he had received a letter from headquarters asking for a contribution. That they were registering all of them and were paying their capitation tax, and it was now up to them to chip in and help out in the reorganization of the party, that if they would give $2. He passed the hat and the colored brethren responded,
After the collection the crowd, who were colored, wanted to know if two of the white Republicans who were in the neighborhood had made a contribution. He says, "Oh, no, we will not ask them for any, but will take all the honor and glory ourselves."
